About the new open access journal

“PTAD is a unique academic journal, filling the burgeoning gap in the field of test adaptations and development.”

Matthias Ziegler, Editor-in-chief

PTAD is the first open access, peer-reviewed journal publishing papers which present the adaptation of tests to specific needs (e. g., cultural), test translations, or the development of existing measures. Moreover, the focus is on the empirical testing of the psychometric quality of these measures. The journal provides a paper template, and registered reports are strongly encouraged.

It is a unique outlet for research papers portraying adaptations (e. g., translations) and developments (e. g., state to trait) of individual tests – the backbone of assessment. The expert editor-in-chief is supported by a stellar cast of internationally renowned associate editors. A generous APC waiver program is available for eligible authors.

Benefits for readers

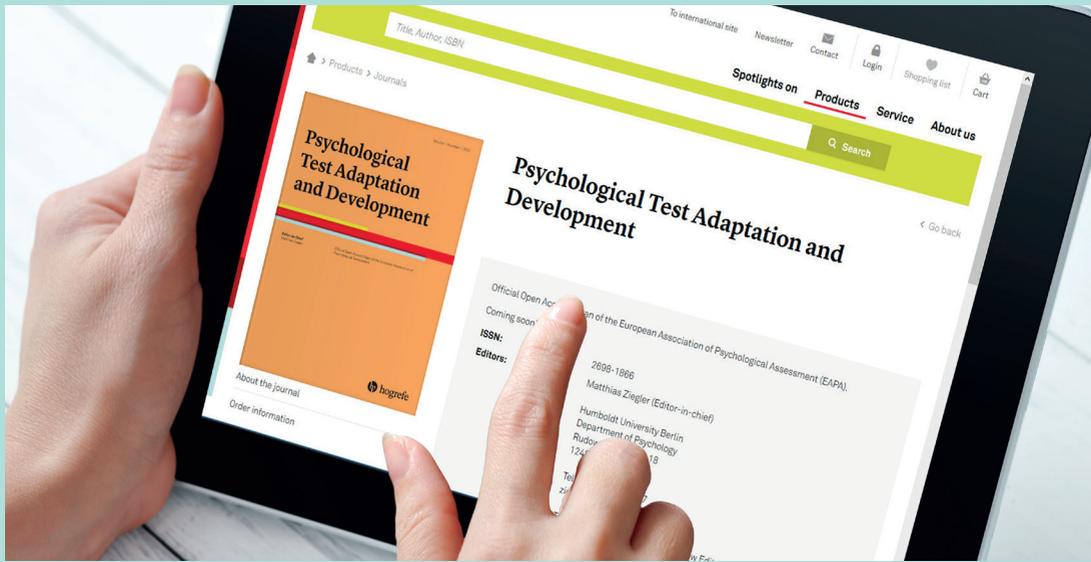

- Fast publication of the latest research on test adaptations and developments
- Uniform structure across papers – all you need to know about the psychometrics, validity, etc., in a standardized form
- Open access – no fees to read or share published papers
- Open science – study data frequently in an open repository
- All papers fully peer-reviewed by leading experts

PTAD is now on Twitter!
